

WHO IS APOLLO?

BOOK WEBSITE

<https://www.thedelphicoracle2.com/>

- All books in English and Spanish

DOCUMENTARY SERIES

<https://www.thedelphicoracle2.com/youtube>

- The best online videography of major historical events, the history of mythology, the gods, the origins of Egypt, the main wars, key figures, and the religious significance of the stories of the gods Apollo, Inti, the Angel Gabriel, and the Oracle of Delphi, since 5000 BC to the present day.

In this documentary series, I explain and demonstrate the existence of the gods, the story of the god Apollo and his role in the Bible as the angel Gabriel, along with his ancient promise to return to the world in the Fourth Eclogue in 40 BC, and the vision of Constantine in 310 AD. and its appearance on the United States seal in 1782.

THE TOP 30 BOOKS THAT ARE NARRATED IN THE BOOK

<https://www.thedelphicoracle2.com/libros/>

Bibliography - The bibliography in English and Spanish of a selection of the 30 main books chosen to corroborate, with the evidence of their content, the veracity of the story of the existence of gods, angels, and their relationship to Christianity. The 30 books, available in English and Spanish in PDF format, contain the accounts, myths, stories, and discourses that were the most important of their time, whether in Egypt, Greece, the Roman Empire, etc., throughout 5,000 years of history.

(+0) Brief Chronological Summary

Although the existence of angels has always been questioned, and skepticism persists regarding a God who has not manifested in physical form since the time of Christ, there has been one angel who has always been present in global history, primarily in the founding of nations and his great influence on the history of Western religion, where he was the main interpreter of the will of Heaven, which was transformed into a single religion thanks to his intervention.

Outside of the hermetic circles where the memory of what was once mythology and the existence of the gods—who were the angels that once civilized the world and walked among humans—is preserved, the outline of who they all were has been forgotten, and only Christ is remembered. Therefore, I will explain in detail their physical manifestation in history through prophets, heroes, kings, and presidents, both before Christ and after Constantine, as proof that they were always present. But above all, I will highlight the god Apollo, brother of Jesus Christ, known in Jewish doctrine as the Angel Gabriel.

After the Great Depression, Franklin Roosevelt ordered that the 1935 one-dollar bill commemorate the U.S. seal, which features a poem dedicated to the god Apollo celebrating his future birth, and the symbol that identified him in Egyptian culture 3,000 years ago, where he was the principal god: the Wadjet. This symbol recalls his battle against the god Seth and how he won the throne of Egypt, bequeathing it to the first pharaoh of the First Dynasty, Menes (or Narmer). It is this god who founded the Egyptian religion, who, with the Oracle of Delphi, founded the Greek religion in the 16th century BC, and who, with Augustus, founded the Roman Empire in the victory of 31 BC. In Actium against Mark Antony, but when Augustus, already emperor of the entire empire, commissioned Virgil to write the Aeneid, the epic poem celebrating how, with Aeneas, the survivors of Troy would found the cities in Italy that would eventually become Rome, it was Virgil who, in 40 BC, composed a poem inspired by a prophecy of the Cumaean Sibyl, priestess of Apollo, celebrating the future birth of Apollo and the purpose of his ministry.

This poem is inscribed on the seal of the United States with the Latin motto, "He hath favored our enterprise," thus announcing at the founding of the United States the future birth of the god Apollo, who made the founding of this nation possible, as will be explained later.

It is Apollo who, in the Book of Daniel, announces the birth of Christ and the purpose of his ministry with the guise of the Angel Gabriel; it is Apollo who announces the birth of Christ, and it is Apollo who, since 197 AD... Until 362 AD, the main cult of the Roman Empire was dedicated to Sol Invictus, an epithet of the sun god Apollo.

This religion was later adopted by Constantine, who transferred its main festivals to honor Christ. For example, Sunday, the day of the sun dedicated to Apollo, was transformed into Dies Dominicus, in honor of Christ, on March 7, 321 AD. This emperor minted coins bearing the image of Sol Invictus, the main evidence of its cult for 13 years, beginning in 310 AD, when an existing text states that the god Apollo foretold a 30-year reign for him. This prophecy was fulfilled, with Constantine reigning for 31 years.

However, the main evidence of the transformation of the religion of Sol Invictus and its celebrations into Christianity begins with the establishment of Christmas 30 years earlier.

In the same year that Constantine was born, 272 AD. Emperor Aurelian defeated Zenobia and Tetricus, thus reuniting the Roman Empire. This emperor recalled that a mysterious figure in the temple of the sun god Elagabalus guided his soldiers to victory at Emesa. In honor of this victory, he established a pontificate and rites dedicated to Sol Invictus, beginning with the triumphal procession of his victory on October 22, 274 AD, and the creation of the main religious festival of this cult, Natalis Solis Invictus, or the birth of Sol Invictus, on December 25, 274 AD—the first recorded date of this celebration being officially observed in the Roman Empire. The historical significance of this celebration lies in the fact that October 22 was celebrated every four years with 36 chariot races, and December 25 with 24 chariot races. It was Constantine who transformed Natalis Solis Invictus into Christmas in 336 AD.

He is Constantine's nephew, the Emperor Julian, who attempts to revive the religion of the Greeks and Romans that Constantine had eclipsed with Christianity. However, he receives the final prophecy of Delphi, after having prophesied since 1600 BC about major historical events such as the Persian Wars, the Punic Wars, and the wars of Augustus, the first emperor, altering the course of history with his prophecies. One of his last prophecies was to Diocletian, Augustus's predecessor, in which he referred to Christians as "the righteous on earth." It is to Julian that he speaks about Christ and why he believed that ending paganism was the right decision in honor of the Spirit of Jesus Christ and the value of his doctrine.

It was on October 22nd (the date on which the quadrennial games instituted by Aurelian, known as the Ludis Solis in honor of Sol Invictus, were celebrated) that a lightning bolt consumed the most magnificent temple of Apollo in the Roman Empire, the Temple of Apollo at Daphne, founded by Seleucus in 300 BC, the greatest successor of Alexander the Great. Julian was asleep in the temple awaiting a divine revelation before his campaign in Persia when the god Apollo appeared to him, saying, "You are destined to die in Asia..." Upon remembering this prophecy shortly before his death, and realizing that everything Apollo had foretold had come to pass, Julian exclaimed, "Oh Helios, you have destroyed Julian!" And thus, with this emperor, the Roman religion came to an end in 363 AD.

The previous year, before leaving Antioch of the Orontes, a place near the temple of Apollo at Daphne, he would deliver his speech "To King Helios" in honor of Apollo, where he would explain the meaning of Christmas, which was celebrated on the winter solstice in honor of the Sun and its personification, the god Apollo. It is in this same speech that he also mentions that October 22nd was celebrated with the same majesty as December 25th.

This October 22nd, I would announce my future birth date: October 22, 1998. Apollo, the Sun God of the Inca and Aztec cultures, under the name Inti, ordered Manco Capac to found the capital of Cusco. Similarly, it was the god Huitzilopochtli who ordered the founding of the Aztec capital, where an eagle would land on a cactus. This legend is present on the Mexican flag. It was Apollo who founded the democracy of Athens with Cleisthenes, endorsing the value of his reform. It was Apollo who guided Emperor Constantine in his youth to power and transform the Empire into a Christian one, associating it with the main festivities of the cult of Sol Invictus, his youthful religion. It was Apollo, in his guise as the angel Gabriel in the Book of Daniel and in Islam, who gave the Quran to Muhammad.

It is Apollo who, with King Louis XIV, founded Versailles, a palace dedicated to the memory and splendor of what was once the existence of the Greek and Roman gods, and the legends of the heroes who walked with them, including Alexander the Great. It is in this palace where the throne room would be the Apollo Room from the youth of Louis XIV until the French Revolution, and it is this king who, in the year 1701, in the War of the Spanish Succession, of the largest empire of his time, the Spanish Empire and its vast colonies, received the anointing of the last emperor of the House of Habsburg in favor of his grandson, Philip V of Anjou, as the future king of the Spanish Empire.

After 12 years of war, in 1713 Louis XIV narrowly defeated England, the Holy Roman Empire, and the other European kingdoms. From that year onward, the Spanish Empire would be under the Bourbon dynasty.

The grandsons of the kings who succeeded Louis XIV, Charles III of Spain and Louis XVI of France, just over 60 years later, united their two kingdoms in the American Revolutionary War, three years after the revolution began in 1776. In 1779, they secured decisive support for the United States in the war. In honor of this victory, the Founding Fathers appointed Charles Thomson to design the seal of the United States. As explained earlier, this seal featured Virgil's Fourth Eclogue, in honor of the future birth of Apollo and the purpose of his ministry. This mirrors the prophecy of the 70 weeks in the Book of Daniel, which foretells the birth of Christ, brother of Apollo, 500 years in advance, as attested in the Book of Daniel. They were also brothers of Alexander the Great, and both were sons of Zeus or Yahweh, the god of Jacob—both being the same god.

The myth of the ages, which describes the Iron Age, begins with Greece and Rome, the last of the ages of man. One of the earliest works of Western literature, known as the Theogony or Generation of the Gods, narrates the existence of all the gods from the time of the Titans and their relationship with humans and the different eras of humanity. Contemporary with Homer's Iliad and written between 750 and 700 BC, it describes the relationship the gods once had with humans before their departure from the world after the Trojan War, dated around 1200 BC. As a consequence, the Dark Ages would follow, but all Greeks would remember their gods as descendants of Hercules, whose sons conquered all of Greece and its kingdoms and reigned there for 800 years. Descendants of the three sons of Hercules would be Leonidas of Sparta and Alexander the Great.

As a continuation of the last religious and literary expression of those who believed themselves to be poets inspired by the gods, such as Hesiod and Homer, came the work of Virgil, the Bucolics and the Eclogues. The most important of these was the Fourth Eclogue, announcing the future birth of Apollo, summarized in its most significant verse:

“Now comes the last era of the Cumaean verses: now a great order is born from the depths of the ages. Now the Virgin returns, now the reigns of Saturn return; now a new progeny descends from the high heavens. You, O chaste Lucina, favor the newborn infant, with whom the Iron Age will end and the Golden Age will begin throughout the world; now your Apollo reigns.”

This poem was present at the founding of the Roman Empire in 40 BC. Also recalling in the Aeneid that it was Apollo who commanded Aeneas, the hero of Troy, on Apollo's birth island of Delos, to found the new Roman nation in Italy and that his descendants would rule over the entire world, in the prophecy of a 30-year reign in Apollo's vision to Constantine in 310 AD, where this poem dedicated to Constantine is mentioned, recalling Apollo and the Fourth Eclogue, in 312 AD, Constantine converted to Christianity. And it is the Fourth Eclogue commemorated in the founding of the nation of the USA on its seal, with the motto Novus Ordo Seclorum, New Order of the Ages, in honor of the main verses of the Fourth Eclogue, and the one who made all this possible, the god Apollo.

My birth, October 22, the date of the burning of the temple of Apollo in Daphne in Türkiye, in 362 AD. During the lifetime of the last pagan emperor of Rome, shortly after consulting Delphi, believing that a Delphic prophecy could refute the Christian religion, Delphi bid farewell, wishing good fortune to the spirit of Christ, by setting the temple ablaze with a lightning bolt that consumed the temple and its statue dedicated by Seleucus in 300 BC, successor of Alexander. Similarly, October 22 marks the inaugural date of the two main celebrations of the cult of Sol Invictus in the year of its inauguration: the Ludi Solis on October 22, as the date of the triumphal procession for the reunification of the Empire by Emperor Aurelian, as evidenced by the Philocal calendar; and December 25, as the date of the establishment of the temple to Sol Invictus by the emperor, called the Natalis Solis Invicti, or the birth of the Unconquered Sun. It was during the lifetime of Julian the Apostate in October of 362 that the last Delphic prophecy was given, 15th century BC. 362 AD

Homer's Iliad, composed in the 8th century BC, recounts a Mycenaean legend set in the 13th century BC, a heroic age dominated by military matters, unbridled individualism, and the pursuit of wealth and glory. Hesiod's Theogony (from the Greek theogonia, meaning "the generations of the gods") is an epic poem of 1,022 lines of hexameter that describes the birth of the gods in the Greek pantheon. In these poems, Apollo appears as one of the main protagonists, supported by the authority of the father of the gods, Zeus, whom the Iliad refers to as his favorite son. In Isaiah, Apollo's rebellion and fall are judged with the enigmatic title:

"How you have fallen from heaven, O Morning Star!"

In the book of Isaiah (7th century BC) and in Ezekiel, it is mentioned that:

"You were in Eden, the garden of God; every precious stone adorned you: carnelian, topaz, jasper, chrysolite, beryl, and onyx; sapphire, turquoise, emerald, and gold. Your settings and mountings were made with skillful workmanship on the day you were created. You were the anointed cherub who covers; I placed you on the holy mountain of God; you walked among the fiery stones. You were blameless in your ways from the day you were created, until unrighteousness was found in you."

(+1) Who is Apollo and what is his connection to Christianity?

He is the brother of Jesus Christ, as evidenced in the Book of Daniel, where Zeus, the Jewish Yahweh, god of Moses, is the same father of Alexander the Great, the angel-prince of Greece, of Jesus Christ of Israel, and the angel Gabriel, also is the one who delivers the prophecies and the destiny of the world in the Book of Daniel given the book's connection to the Greco-Persian Wars, in favor of Greece against Persia, he is identified as the Greek god Apollo.

Is this the same Angel Gabriel who at the Annunciation, instructed Mary that she would bear the son responsible for the continuity and reform of the Hebrew tradition.

(+2) The attributes of Apollo and the history of Greece and Rome, their mythology, and how this transformed into the Christian religion.

It was Apollo who, before the cities of Greece were founded, beginning with Athens, he who established the Oracle of Delphi, the oldest religious center in Europe, dating back to the 15th century BC. There, the principal mythological heroes and founders of the legendary Greek cities before recorded history sought the oracle's advice about the future. It is a key part of the history of all the founders of Greece. Similarly, thanks to an oracle at Delphi, the survivors of Troy settled in Rome. Remembering this feat, Constantine, the first Christian emperor of Rome, founded the new capital of the empire, Constantinople, in front of Troy.

It was this emperor who, with the help of the most dedicated Christians of his time, in a process beginning in 312 AD, from the time he declared himself a Christian, until the Council of Nicaea in 325 where the Catholic religion was founded, and in 336, the establishment of Christmas, he established and spread the Christian religion from being persecuted to being the main faith of Rome, accompanied by the vestiges of the cult of Sol Invictus, an epithet of Apollo, a religion that was the main religious manifestation before the end of paganism from 197 AD to 362 AD, which Constantine professed in his youth. It is Constantine's nephew, Julian the Apostate, also a devotee of the god Apollo, the last pagan emperor of Rome who, wanting to eradicate the Christianity of his uncle Constantine and give new vitality to paganism, that he seeks the oracle of Delphi, where it prophesies the end of the oracle and the last prophecy in honor of Christ.

The prophecies of Delphi, which foretold the future, have been recorded since mythological times by the kings of Greece, throughout the history of their monarchies, and throughout the history of the Roman Republic. Apollo was the principal god of Augustus, having granted him victory and the throne of Rome at the Battle of Actium, the emperor during whose reign Christ was born.

The book presents the main prophecies in relation to the major historical events of its time and how Delphi altered the course of history.

(+3) Apollo's connection to Hebrew tradition and the main religious evidence.

-The Book of Daniel, authored by the Angel Gabriel, prophesying Christ, the purpose of his ministry, and the future of the world.

-The Quran, given to Muhammad by the Angel Gabriel, the principal holy book of Islam.

(+4) Apollo's connection to the modern world and proof of his existence by the most influential leaders who laid the foundations that shaped the modern world.

Louis XIV, who in the War of the Spanish Succession bequeathed the Spanish Empire to his grandson Philip V—the largest monarchy in the world in the 17th century—and in 1776, the union of the Spanish Empire and France, whose monarchs were grandsons of Louis XIV, secured decisive support for the independence of the USA through Franco-Spanish aid to Washington. As a result, a prophecy dedicated to Apollo and the reason for his ministry in 1782 was made, celebrating his future birth on the seal of the USA, commemorating the victory in honor of this god along with the motto, "He has favored our enterprise."

(+5) Because Apollo was the principal god of Greece, Rome, and Egypt from 3000 BC. until the end of paganism, a historical turning point that was a decision of Constantine who achieved it with the vision of Apollo in 310 AD where Apollo reminded him of the fourth eclogue and prophesied 30 years of happy reign that historically came to be accomplished.

Apollo founded the Egyptian religion and bequeathed the throne to the first dynasty of Egypt in 3000 BC. He founded the Greek religion after taking possession of the Oracle of Delphi in 1600 BC, and thanks to his oracles, the first cities of Greece were founded: Athens, Thebes, Troy, and other cities in Asia Minor. One of his oracles also confirmed the establishment of democracy in Athens by Cleisthenes. He laid the foundations of Western civilization through the Roman Empire, whose first emperor, Augustus, secured victory against his rival, Mark Antony. He was also a promoter of political reform in the Western Hemisphere, based on democracy, as exemplified by Roosevelt, who, after the Great Depression, ordered the imprint of the US seal on the one-dollar bill.

-Apollo is the Sphinx of Giza and protector of the Egyptian royalty.

-The main sacred texts of Greek and Roman mythology and literature—the Iliad, Greece's principal epic and the first work of Western literature, and Rome's Aeneid—have Apollo's participation as their starting point.

-The Incas and Aztecs, before the Spanish conquest, considered the sun god, personified as Inti, Huitzilopochtli, or Apollo, to be the founder of their cultures and their principal deity.

-The months of the year are named in honor of the gods: August in honor of Augustus, founder of Rome, as are the days of the week. Sunday, or dies dominicus, was known as dies solis, or day of the sun, in honor of Apollo. Constantine dedicated this day to Christ. They were dedicated to the gods.

(+6) Once these relevant events are known, I can continue with the assertion that I demonstrate with all the evidence in the book as to why I claim to be its protagonist.

Greetings, my name is Carlos Hans Manchego, and I'm here to present a book in which I claim to be a protagonist. To make this story coherent, a story that blends religion with mythology and history, I demonstrate with literary, historical, and archaeological evidence how ancient peoples were certain of the existence of their gods, but only after the end of paganism. However, as few have studied, it was during the time of the last pagan emperor of Rome, when the final prophecy of Delphi was given, that this oracle decreed that it was the will of the Greek god Apollo to bring the good fortune of Christianity. He bequeathed the power of the last manifestation of the Roman religion, the cult of Sol Invictus, so that it would merge with Christianity, so that in due time the symbolism left for this purpose would manifest itself throughout history, from the symbolic acts of Constantine's affiliation with the cult of Sol Invictus, to the end of this 150-year-long religion, where in its final year, during the reign of Emperor Julian, Constantine's apostate nephew, the mystical meaning the Romans held for Christmas before their conversion to Christianity is explained. It was celebrated in honor of Sol Invictus, an epithet of Apollo, from December 25, 274 AD until 336 AD, when it was officially established as a Christian holiday. However, it continued to be celebrated in honor of Christ and Sol Invictus until the time of the last non-Christian emperor, in 362 AD, when Julian explained why it was celebrated in honor of Apollo.

Similarly, two years before Christ's vision of the cross to Constantine, which officially converted him to Christianity, an oracle of Apollo prophesied a 30-year reign for him in his fifth year on the throne. From then on, he minted coins featuring Sol Invictus, just as the Roman emperors who had worshipped Sol Invictus since 197 AD had done. until 324 AD, the last date of emission to Sol Invictus by Constantine.

In the same text of Apollo's vision that is still preserved, mention is made of the fourth eclogue written by Virgil in 40 BC, which claims to be a prophecy of the Cumaean Sibyl, the same one who lived immortal and delivered the prophecies of all that would happen to Rome to Tarquin the Proud, the last king of Rome. Stylized as a prophecy by Virgil in 40 BC, during the time of Augustus, where Apollo announces his return to the world. It is through Apollo that Augustus obtains his empire, and this same image would appear on the US seal and the one-dollar bill by order of Franklin Roosevelt.

Thus Julian, the last emperor of the Greek religion, explains that December 25th celebrated the winter solstice or was a solar festival dedicated to the sun and the god in whom this celestial body was personified, Apollo. This festival existed from 274 AD, 38 years before Constantine's conversion, and a year before his death, he established it as Christmas. However, before the institution of the cult of Sol Invictus on December 25th, 274, celebrating the reunification of the empire and the help of the god Sol Invictus or Apollo, the establishment of the cult and the most celebrated triumphal march began on October 22nd, 274, thus creating the first milestone that 88 years later would end with October 22nd, 362, the date of the burning of the Temple of Apollo at Daphne, two weeks after the last prophecy, which would mark the starting point and announce my future date of birth, celebrating December 25th, 362. Julian recites the hymn to King Helios or Apollo, explaining the meaning of Christmas, the only document on the subject.

(+7) If Apollo is not Christ, why should he be recognized, either by religion or for his civilizing contribution to the West?

Even if Apollo, who claims to be me, is the brother of Christ, he has sufficient legitimacy among many cultures as the primordial ancestor of their race or religion that internal indifference would not be long in coming before the whole world recognizes the legitimacy of my story and ministry.

-Founder of the Egyptian and Greek religions.

-Author of the Book of Daniel, one of the three main prophetic books of the Bible.

-Co-founder of Athenian democracy with Cleisthenes

-Co-participant in the Greek victory in the Greco-Persian Wars, co-participant in the Roman victory against Carthage, co-participant in the founding of Rome with Augustus, co-participant in the reunification of the Roman Empire with Aurelian, who established the Natalis Solis Invicti on December 25, 274, co-participant in the establishment of Christianity with Constantine. Co-participant, as the angel Gabriel, in the establishment of Islam. Co-participant, along with the Bourbon kings, heirs of Louis XIV, the Sun King, in the independence of the 13 North American colonies.

(+8) Apollo's relationship with Peru and Latin America

Being the civilizer not only of the Inca and Aztec culture, with his name of Huitzilopochtli he ordered the founding of the Aztec capital in 1300 AD. Through migrants from the north, and guided by their own influence, they managed to conquer all the neighboring kingdoms, just as the Incas conquered all the neighboring cultures by order of Inti through Manco Capac, who founded the Inca capital in the Cuzco Valley. This same civilizing and evangelizing strategy would be used by Muhammad, who founded the Muslim religion with the Quran, transmitted by the angel Gabriel. It is little known that Apollo was responsible for the founding of the North American nation, with the Kingdom of France and the Bourbons as its architects. Their greatest apogee was celebrated with the god Louis XIV, the Sun King, whose name was dedicated to his guide, the god Apollo, in whose honor he founded Versailles. It was his grandson, Louis XVI, who, even during the time when the French government palace was Versailles, where the throne room was the Apollo Room, secured the victory of the USA with his military support.

(+9) The winter solstice, the rebirth of the sun, the Inti Raymi of the hemisphere, the meaning of Christmas and its relationship to Inti or Apollo, personification of the Sun

The book narrates the common pattern of all these historical events, which is Delphi, Gabriel or Apollo, who would be the same Inti who founded the Andean race and makes a coherent whole of the civilizing work in all historical periods and major turning points that shaped the history and religion of the world. The Inca Empire, before the arrival of the Spanish, celebrated Inti Raymi on June 21st to celebrate the winter solstice in the Southern Hemisphere. The Spanish then replaced the main festival honoring the god Inti, the personification of the sun, with Christmas. However, as only the most knowledgeable know, this festival was also dedicated to the sun god in a very remote era, celebrating the winter solstice in the Northern Hemisphere not on December 21st, when the winter solstice actually begins, but because the Romans decided that it should be fixed on the date when the sun was only visible to the naked eye, when it was reborn. At the end of the solstice, on December 25th, the rebirth of the sun was celebrated as Natalis Solis Invicti, or the birth of the invincible sun, in honor of the Greek god Apollo, whose myths are remembered as the spirit who delivered the prophecies of the Oracle of Delphi, the main temple of the Hellenic world.

(+10) Most notable verses of the fourth eclogue, highly esteemed by Constantine for being in his vision of 310 and on the seal of the USA, in 1782.

«"Now the last age by Cumae's Sibyl sung
Has come and gone, and the majestic roll
Of circling centuries begins anew: Justice returns, returns old Saturn's reign,

With a new breed of men sent down from heaven. Only do thou, at the boy's birth in whom

The iron shall cease, the golden race arise, Befriend him, chaste Lucina; 'tis thine own Apollo reigns."»

Apollo, and in gratitude for his aid in the War of Independence, was the chosen design for the United States Congress on June 13, 1782. The Eye of Providence at the top of the pyramid, which could be identified as the Eye of Horus, the Egyptian name for Apollo, was called the "Wadjet," and is accompanied by the motto "Annuit Coeptis." "Annuit Coeptis" is a phrase from Ascanius, the son of the hero Aeneas, which translates as "Almighty Jupiter, favor my daring undertakings," but in this case, the Eye of Providence is dedicated to Apollo.

The motto "Novus Ordo Seclorum," meaning "New Order of the Ages," was adapted from a line in Virgil's Eclogue IV, a pastoral poem written by the famous Roman author in 40 BC. which expresses the yearning for a new era of peace and happiness, the text of which is still preserved, when in the original text it read as follows:

"...a new series of great centuries begins, the reigns of Saturn return, your Apollo reigns now," is the source of the motto Novus Ordo Seclorum, 'New Order of the Ages,' on the Seal of the United States."

(#11) The vision of Apollo by an orator in celebration of his fifth year on the throne, dedicated to Constantine

"Fortune herself so ordered this that the felicity of your situation reminded you to bring what you had vowed to the immortal gods, in the very place where you had already made a detour to the most beautiful temple in the whole world, or rather to the god who was manifest there, when you saw him. For you did I believe, Constantine, see your patron Apollo, and Victory accompanying him, offering you crowns of laurel, each of which represents a foretelling of thirty years. That is of course the length of human generations, which are certainly due to take you beyond the old age of Nestor. And yet why do I say 'I believe'? You did see him, and you recognized yourself in the image of the one to whom the sacred poems of bards prophesied that the kingdoms of the whole world were due by right (in reference to Apollo). That has now I think at last come to pass, seeing that you are, Emperor, like him, young, blessed, our savior and a most handsome one! So quite rightly did you adorn those most venerable temples with such offerings that they no longer miss their former ones, and now all temples seem to be calling you to them—and especially our Apollo, in whose boiling waters are punished perjurers, whom you above all have good cause to hate."

"Ye immortal gods, when will you grant the day that this most benevolent deity shall have established peace everywhere and may visit those groves of Apollo as well, and the sacred temple and steaming fountain springs? Their bubbling waters, warm and gently gushing, seem eager to smile upon your eyes, Constantine, and to flow into your lips. To be sure, you will marvel too at the shrine of your patron god there, and the waters heated without any indication of the ground boiling. There is no bitterness in their taste or appearance, but a clarity of flavour and aroma like that of cool springs. There too you will make donations, establish privileges, in short restore my own home country by worshipping that very place. That ancient noble city which once prided itself in its fraternal relations with Rome, is awaiting the assistance of your sovereignty, so that there too public buildings and splendid temples may be repaired by your generosity. In such a way I observe this happy city, whose foundation day is being commemorated by your gracious visit, reviving so much in every quarter that it may even yet rejoice to have once collapsed, since it has grown greater through your benevolence."

My birth, October 22, the date of the burning of the temple of Apollo in Daphne in Türkiye, in 362 AD. During the lifetime of the last pagan emperor of Rome, shortly after consulting Delphi, believing that a Delphic prophecy could refute the Christian religion, Delphi bid farewell, wishing good fortune to the spirit of Christ, by setting the temple ablaze with lightning. The lightning consumed the temple and the statue dedicated by Seleucus in 300 BC, successor to Alexander. Similarly, a lightning strike on the house of Romulus, the first founder of Rome, foretold the emperor Augustus would build the Temple of Apollo Palatinus in 28 BC, a year before founding the Empire. This temple was also burned during the lifetime of Julian the Apostate. Likewise, October 22nd marks the inaugural date of the two main celebrations of the cult of Sol Invictus in the year of its inauguration: the Ludi Solis on October 22nd, the date of the triumphal procession for the reunification of the Empire by Emperor Aurelian, as evidenced by the Philocalian calendar; and December 25th, the date of the... The establishment of the Temple of Sol Invictus by the emperor, known as the Natalis Solis Invicti, or the Birth of the Unconquered Sun, in homage to the Sun and its personification, the god Apollo, occurred in October of 362. This event is also associated with the last prophecy of Apollo or Delphi, dating from the 15th century BC to 362 AD.

The religion of Rome continued its traditional course until the arrival of the cult of Sol Invictus, likely imported from Syria. This cult reached its peak under Emperor Aurelian, whose troops had been inspired by a "divine form" at the Battle of Emesa against Zenobia in 272 AD (Historia Augusta, Aurelian). Victorious, he entered the city and went to the Temple of Elagabalus, where the apparition appeared to him again. Aurelian returned triumphantly to Rome two years later, after reconquering the Gallic Empire, and was acclaimed as Restitutor Orbis, "Restorer of the World." A magnificent temple to Sol was erected on December 25, 274 AD, to which vast quantities of gold and jewels were dedicated, and a new college of pontiffs was established to serve the god, who was to become the supreme deity of Rome. Similarly, he would mint coins dedicated to Sol Invictus throughout his reign, and a rare issue of his coins would bear the legend 'SOL DOMINVS IMPERI ROMANI', meaning 'Sol, Lord of the Roman Empire'.

On March 7, 321, Constantine consecrated Dies Solis, the Day of the Sun, Sunday, as a day of rest and worship of God, thus further emphasizing the connection between the Sun and Christianity. Similarly, on November 1, 324 AD, just six weeks after Constantine's victory over Licinius at Chrysopolis and already the sole emperor of the Roman Empire, he moved the Serpent Column of Plataea from Delphi to the Hippodrome of Constantinople. This was the same offering made by the Greeks in gratitude for Apollo's assistance to them during the Persian Wars of 479 BC, subtly reinforcing Constantine's association with his former patron deity, Apollo.

On the date of Aurelian's triumphal procession after the reunification of Rome on October 22, thirty chariot races (circenses missus) were run in the circus that day, making it the second most celebrated festival of the year, surpassed only by the Ludi Solis on October 22 and the 24 chariot races on August 28. Every four years, thirty-six races were dedicated to Sol on the final day of the games, which ran from October 19 to 22, to commemorate Aurelian's earlier triumphal procession. These quadrennial games are mentioned by Julian (reigned 361–363 AD) in his Hymn to King Helios, who refers to them as a "very recent" institution.

Just as today the main religious festival of Christians is Easter followed by Christmas on December 25, in the time of the Late Roman Empire, October 22 and the games of the Sun (Ludi Solis) was the main one, followed by December 25 or the festival of the birth of the Unconquered Sun (Dies Natalis Solis Invicti).

(+12) What I plan to achieve once I gain fame with my work: Co-participation in Latin America

- I plan to be a co-participant in the joint work of Latin America as a commercial and political bloc. With a similar GDP to India, raw materials and resources, but without a highly developed industry, it has the potential to leverage technology and management sciences to better utilize its capabilities as a bloc. With the size of Russia and the same population as the USA, it has the potential to accelerate its economic growth to the same pace as China has experienced in the last 10 years.

- Competitiveness reform in the main administrative centers. Without the main economic and administrative centers, but as an independent bloc, since it is not the right time until a well-defined negotiating agreement is in place, until then all kinds of aid will come from the private sector and a shared history with Europe and its empires, as well as volunteers from the USA, among others, for Latin America, and the cultural and religious value of the legacy of Egypt, Rome, Greece, democracy—in all of which Apollo is present—the Book of Daniel in Judaism, the Quran in Islam, and the Annunciation with the legacy of Constantine in Christianity.

(+13) Original text explaining the meaning of why Christmas was celebrated in honor of Apollo on the winter solstice, in the hymn to King Helios by the last emperor who professed this faith.

"Did not Apollo, who reigns with him, deliver his oracles to every corner of the earth, grant men divine wisdom, and adorn their cities with religious and civil laws? He civilized most of the inhabited earth by means of the Greek colonies, facilitating submission to the Romans, who are not only of Greek race, but who have also established and kept divine laws and trust in the gods from beginning to end as something Greek; moreover, they were not inferior to any of the best-governed cities in regard to the organization of their city, not to say that they were superior to all other systems used, at least until now. For this reason, I believe that Apollo recognized this city as having a Greek origin and constitution..."

... Do you wish me to mention yet another proof of this, I mean the work of King Numa? In Rome maiden priestesses guard the undying flame of the sun at different hours in turn; they guard the fire that is produced on earth by the agency of the god. And I can tell you a still greater proof of the power of this god, which is the work of that most divine king himself.

The months are reckoned from the moon by, one may say, all other peoples; but we and the Egyptians alone reckon the days of every year according to the movements of the sun. If after this I should say that we also worship Mithras, and celebrate games in honour of Helios (The quadrennial games are the Ludi Solis from October 19 to 22) every four years, I shall be speaking of customs that are somewhat recent. But perhaps it is better to cite a proof from the remote past. The beginning of the cycle of the year is placed at different times by different peoples. Some place it at the spring equinox, others at the height of summer, and many in the late autumn; but they each and all sing the praises of the most visible gifts of Helios. One nation celebrates the season best adapted for work in the fields, when the earth bursts into bloom and exults, when all the crops are just beginning to sprout, and the sea begins to be safe for sailing, and the disagreeable, gloomy winter puts on a more cheerful aspect; others again award the crown to the summer season, since at that time they can safely feel confidence about the yield of the fruits, when the grains have already been harvested and midsummer is now at its height, and the fruits on the trees are ripening.

Others again, with still more subtlety, regard as the close of the year the time when all the fruits are in their perfect prime and decay has already set in. For this reason they celebrate the annual festival of the New Year in late autumn. But our forefathers, from the time of the most divine king Numa, paid still greater reverence to the god Helios. They ignored the question of mere utility, I think, because they were naturally religious and endowed with unusual intelligence; but they saw that he is the cause of all that is useful, and so they ordered the observance of the New Year to correspond with the present season; that is to say when King Helios returns to us again, and leaving the region furthest south and, rounding Capricorn as though it were a goal-post, advances from the south to the north to give us our share of the blessings of the year. And that our forefathers, because they comprehended this correctly, thus established the beginning of the year, one may perceive from the following.

For it was not, I think, the time when the god turns, but the time when he becomes visible to all men, as he travels from south to north, that they appointed for the festival. For still unknown to them was the nicety of those laws which the Chaldaeans and Egyptians discovered, and which Hipparchus and Ptolemy perfected: but they judged simply by sense-perception, and were limited to what they could actually see.

But the truth of these facts was recognised, as I said, by a later generation. Before the beginning of the year, at the end of the month which is called after Kronos, we celebrate in honour of Helios the most splendid games, and we dedicate the festival to the Invincible Sun.

And after this it is not lawful to perform any of the shows that belong to the last month, gloomy as they are, though necessary. But, in the cycle, immediately after the end of the Kronia (Saturnalia, celebrated from December 17 to 23) follow the Heliaia." (Hymn to King Helios, Julian)

Once the Saturnalia ended, the festival of "Invincible Helios" was celebrated shortly afterward. Julian, who states that the celebration of December 25th dated back to the time of King Numa Pompilius (the second king of Rome, successor to Romulus, who reigned from 716 to 674 BC, and who founded the Roman religion, as attested by Plutarch in his Parallel Lives), attempts to explain why the ancient Romans believed that this festival was the winter solstice.

The winter solstice marks the arrival of winter and is also the longest night of the year, which would be understood as the birth of the Sun for those who could observe this phenomenon. The ancient Romans traced an annual movement of the sun in relation to the earth. They observed that at the end of autumn the days shortened and the sun dipped lower in the sky. For them, the sun appeared to be dying. On December 21st, when "The sun stood still," the ancients believed the sun had "died" and that darkness would engulf the earth. For the next three days—the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th—the sun appeared to have paused precariously (meaning the sun's declining path would change direction in three days).

The nights didn't last longer, but neither did the days. On December 25th, the sun rose a little earlier and climbed a little higher in the sky than the day before. Ah! The sun had been reborn!

My birth, October 22nd, the date of the burning of the Temple of Apollo at Daphne in Turkey, in 362 AD. During the lifetime of the last pagan emperor of Rome, shortly after consulting Delphi, believing that a Delphic prophecy could refute the Christian religion, Delphi bid farewell, wishing good fortune to the spirit of Christ, by setting the temple ablaze with lightning that consumed the temple and its statue dedicated by Seleucus in 300 BC, successor of Alexander. Similarly, October 22nd marks the inaugural date of the two main celebrations of the cult of Sol Invictus in the year of its inauguration, 274 AD: the Ludi Solis on October 22nd, commemorating the triumphal procession for the reunification of the Empire by Emperor Aurelian, as evidenced by the calendar of Philocalus (354 AD); and December 25th, the date of the establishment of the temple to Sol Invictus by the emperor, called the Natalis Solis Invicti, or the birth of the Unconquered Sun. It was during the lifetime of Julian the Apostate, in October of 362, that the last prophecy of Delphi was said, 15th century BC - 362 AD.

(+14) Although I suspected I was Apollo since late 2016 when I discovered my birthdate, I didn't pay much attention to it until 2021.

During the pandemic break, instead of dedicating myself to gaming, I was 21 years old and passionate about online sports. I had planned to study diplomacy, but upon learning of the responsibility involved, I decided to dedicate all my time to the study of religion and the ancient world. I decided to study and research the history of religion and mythology to discover who I was, since I had been aware of it since mid-2016, when I discovered that my birthday was October 22nd and that it coincided with the burning of the Temple of Apollo on Daphne. I didn't think much of it at the time. It was then that, to clear up my doubts and investigate in depth the meaning of the existence of the god Apollo, I was skeptical of being him, but even so I knew that December 25th or Christmas had a relationship with Apollo and the one-dollar bill, and the Iliad and Delphi. Although I had not studied them in depth, I decided to read more than 400 books where I created a synthesis of the main points that made the existence of mythology and religion a coherent story. In the bibliography of the book I include online links to acquire the free archive of more than 30 books where the main historical events, sacred texts, speeches of the emperors and main religious and literary evidence are found, which are evidence of the originality of the work. Everything is the result of research conducted between 2021 and 2024. In October 2023, I presented this book to the archiepiscopate. This is why the Pope who succeeded Francis, being Latin American (since my existence was known from my youth), should assume that the Church, upon learning of everything I affirm in my book and my story, chose to be Peruvian in order to show respect for my history.

(+15) The Last Prophecy of Delphi

After the death of Constantine's son, Constantius II, in 361 AD, his nephew Julian, better known as Julian the Apostate, succeeded to the throne. Julian, who reigned from 361 to 363, attempted to reverse the success of Christianity achieved by Constantine and his sons. It was Julian's desire and plan to deprive Christians of the advantages of wealth, knowledge, and power. At the same time, most Christian officials were gradually removed from their positions in the state, the army, and the provinces. He also tried to draw the majority of his subjects back to the old religion of Rome, giving preeminence to the philosophers and priests of his faith. It is recounted in the Passion of Saint Artemius, written by Philostorgius, that Artemius, Duke of Egypt and former companion of Constantius II, would reproach Julian for his actions against the Christians, announcing that Christ was the only true god, foretold by the prophets, the sibyls and the Sibylline Books, and at the same time mentioning the answer brought from the Oracle of Delphi by Oribasius, Julian's physician, revealing to Julian the final prophecy:

«Go tell the king the wondrous hall is fallen to the ground. Now Phoebus has a cell no more, no laurel that foretells, No talking spring; the water that once spoke is heard no more.»

and later continues:

"O would that you had never asked me at my very end,

Unhappy ministers of mine, about the holy god

And spirit holding cluster-like all things in its embrace:

The stars, the light, the rivers, Tartarus, the air and fire!

This spirit drives me all unwilling from this very shrine.

And now the day when I must yield my tripods!» is at hand.

O grieve for me, ye tripods, grieve: Apollo now departs; Departs:

a mortal man who is from heaven forces me;

He is the God who suffered, yet his godhead suffered not."!

Five miles from Antioch, in the suburb of Daphne, the Macedonian kings of Syria had dedicated to Apollo one of the most elegant places of worship in the pagan world. A magnificent temple was erected in honor of the god of light; his colossal figure almost filled the spacious sanctuary, which was enriched with gold and gems and adorned by the skill of Greek artists. It is said to have been equal in size to Phidias's statue of Zeus at Olympia, one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World.

To fulfill the promise given by the Oracle of Delphi, the statue and temple of Apollo at Daphne, near Antioch, were to be consumed by fire on October 22, 362 AD, by non-human hands, or, as the Christians recounted, by lightning, or by the action of God. The emperor, faced with the choice between a miracle and the vengeance of the Christians, chose the latter. Julian would die in his campaign in Persia seven months later. According to the Byzantine chronicler John Malalas, before departing, he had a dream in the temple of Apollo at Daphne where a child told him, "It is destined that you will die in Asia." When he was wounded in battle and asked where he was, upon learning it was Asia, his last words were, "Oh Helios, you have destroyed Julian."

HOW GODS OR ANGELS CONTROL PEOPLE'S MINDS

The Harry Potter film, directed by Christopher Columbus, was made in honor of the discovery of America, since my life and I are portrayed as Harry. It was known that the fate of that continent would always be linked to me. The magic of controlling the electricity of any digital device, the electricity in the mind of any human—just like controlling a mind with Wi-Fi anywhere in the world, or controlling any animal with this magic—is available in the Harry Potter film. But if you want to appreciate how it is fully realized in machines, a technology belonging to the gods long before recorded history, you have to watch Jung E. The technology of 100 years later already exists, only it's kept secret.

Instead of invalidating a single god and a single power or will, my desire is to create proof of the adventure that the ideal world should be created not by the will of a god, but by the consensus of all, as seen in the prophecy of the fourth eclogue or the Age of Saturn, when in an idyllic time gods and humans lived in harmony, and that this adventure would begin its course with the birth of Apollo, along with the story of the existence of angels or gods.

And as the misadventures of Harry Potter narrate, so that such events would never occur, the mysterious event of 11 changes destiny, thus changing history in the most imperceptible way, thus delaying events by two years. The more difficulty and pressure were created in the simplest way possible, just like in the past, the more acute the effort became to reverse the difficulty of the error, which in the end never existed.

Harry Potter discovers the world of magic at age 11, thus gaining time to prepare for the challenges of his adventures and all that needed to be resolved to create such a world. The most distant difficulty, not only relying on people's faith in him as an angel, but also on the complexity of an angel's ability to change reality.

Since I will be widely known for the infamy associated with the number 11, it is proof that it was always the witchcraft of controlling minds found on the internet simultaneously, to reveal to the future something that invalidates sanctity or creates a margin of skepticism, so as never to reach consensus. All of this was strategically distributed during my childhood naiveté to create friction once I became famous.

That's how all the girls I met online began to set a trap for me, to later frame me. I'm telling you this because as soon as I become famous, all of this will come to light. Strategic tricks to construct a coherent excuse that denies or invalidates my legitimacy, all as a PROJECT. Otherwise, they wouldn't have spied on everything I do online since 2011.

Therefore, I explain here how this happened and how it was orchestrated by those who were reluctant to accept the complete success of my company, so they could control the future without any input from me.

SCIENTIFIC EXPLANATION OF HOW THE PROCESS OF CONTROLLING PEOPLE WORKS:

- Through intermittent psychic emissions that adapt to our neural processing, people's minds are influenced, varying the degree of perception of this magic through a network of induced information and nerve impressions that reconfigure and alter each side of the brain. This affects everything from decisions and actions to emotions and thoughts, influencing emotions that determine critical decisions, such as complacency, fear, doubt, impulsiveness, the blind confidence of ambition, etc.
- Just like cameras or a digital device, humans are like robots, with NASA controlling the Mars Rovers behind their actions. This has a global reach, and to intermittently reconfigure everything that happens to the temporary test subjects under this influence, neural coupling technology allows for the control of actions in any person unaware of being influenced. This is repeated in generic humans who surround or influence a person's routine, thus influencing them externally, just as the Pythia was possessed by the spirit of the god Apollo to deliver her prophecies in a trance.
- The mind is numbed, and any personal impulses are forgotten, making it impossible to reverse the external pressure.
- Psychic emissions then send a certain thought of irresistible curiosity, and there one encounters a surprise that will consume our time and influence our thoughts with its striking appearance, instead of wanting to choose any other option. • By equating a percentage of our thoughts, intermittent psychic emissions instill fear or insecurity, forcing us to make a secondary decision, rather than a previously considered primary one... Emotions or nervous impressions, and being exposed to them, form a wedge formation that dissolves any other idea.
- ...and how this generates invisible clues or lines and paths, like an algorithm that creates patterns in the chaos, indicating which path to involuntarily follow in our own decisions, without us processing their consequences beyond the emotion that seeks to precipitate their realization, such as anxiety, anger, or an impulse of ambition. The memory of the impressions of each decision made redirects the matrix of subsequent decisions, without us having the judgment of what caused us to have such impressions or how much we could have changed our minds before the frenzy or impetuosity made it irreversible.
- It's like being in a casino; the notion of greed makes you take an uncontrolled impulse that ignores any other influence, and you don't react until it's too late to judge what you've done. Or, when you lose money, you only seek to recover it, without any certainty of it, simply hypnotized by the idea. It's this emotion that shapes our behavior, not a premeditated calculation. And to this we must add induced ideas that are reflected in something we find in reality and that we seek to discover more about, like a movie or video, a prefabricated dose designed to mold our thoughts with each serving we consume. It's like alcohol; you get intoxicated, and you can only return to your original state by avoiding watching that content, unless you've been exposed to it enough times to know where it all leads.
- Logic allows you to think and reflect, but it doesn't guide your actions under real-time pressure driven by emotions such as fear or comfort. Logic only partially controls our actions because it hasn't cultivated an understanding of emotions and how they cause us to act involuntarily, deceiving our sensory perception with anger, fear, anxiety, and anguish. This weakens our will, requiring only the slightest stimulus to force us into actions we will later regret.

- The nervous impressions caused by contact with technology, such as seeing violence, create a fog in the mind that causes a side effect on the stream of thoughts. Similarly, with content pre-designed by the time machine, where gods can live like a virus on the web, designing any content to be seen by you in real time, this influences you to take one of a few predetermined paths and abandon your will to do everything you had planned. In the same way, a time machine can involuntarily predefine your thoughts, words, and actions if your mind is in a lethargic state, unless you reboot and become aware in real time of being under its influence.